EVERY GIFT MATTERS: How Your Passion Can Change the World

We read the headlines where foundations make multi-million dollar donations to fix communities around the world. The reality is, for every dollar American foundations give each year, individual donors give five. The power to fix problems in our communities lies in the volunteer hours and checkbooks of everyday individuals.

In her book EVERY GIFT MATTERS: How Your Passion Can Change the World (Greenleaf Book Group Press; May 5, 2015), philanthropist Carrie Morgridge proves that high-impact philanthropy is not always high-dollar, and she teaches people how to make a difference in the world with small, targeted gifts of time or money. Drawing on her own experience of what works and what doesn't when it comes to philanthropy, Morgridge illuminates how leverage, high expectations, hands-on personal involvement, and, above all else, passion, will ensure that one's gift will have the biggest impact possible and also bring the giver a profound sense of joy and fulfillment.

In EVERY GIFT MATTERS, Morgridge shares how giving has shaped her heart and uses her experience to inspire and teach others how to make a difference. While Morgridge has made large gifts through her foundation, she has found that it's the smaller gifts, some as little as $7, that make the most immediate and visible impact on people's lives and bring the greatest joy. In EVERY GIFT MATTERS, Morgridge takes the lessons she has learned making high-impact small gifts and identifies the key principles of effective giving that anyone can use, whether you donate your treasure or talent, whether you have a lot or a little to give.

“Carrie Morgridge has written a very important book. So many people have told me they really want to help, but they give nothing because they feel a small gift cannot make a difference. But it can, as you will learn from the inspiring examples in Every Gift Matters.”
